

R. J. Smith

Director of Outreach Center for Private Conservation

Mr. Smith completed his undergraduate work in geology and received a B.S. from Stanford. In addition, he completed graduate work in economics at New York University. Mr. Smith has done extensive research on wildlife, endangered species, property rights and private land stewardship. He was Director of Environmental Studies at the Cato Institute and Senior Environmental Scholar at the Competitive Enterprise Institute. He also served as a consultant to the Department of Interior, the President's Council of Environmental Quality, and was a special assistant at the EPA. He is an avid birder and past president of the Monmouth County, New Jersey Audubon Society. Currently, Mr. Smith is an Adjunct Scholar in Environmental Studies at the CEI.