

Michael D. Stroup

Michael D. Stroup is an Associate Professor of Economics at Stephen F. Austin State University, where he is currently serving as the Interim Associate Dean of the Nelson Rusche College of Business. Stroup received his Master's degree in economics from the University of Washington in 1990 and his doctorate in economics from Florida State University in 1993. He has authored articles appearing in academic journals such as Public Choice, Kyklos, and the Atlantic Economic Journal, as well as co-authored an instructor's manual for a leading economics textbook. His current research in the areas of public economics and comparative economic systems includes empirical statistical analysis of how international differences in institutional characteristics have influenced the extent of economic development and improvements to human welfare across societies. Stroup conducts undergraduate and graduate level courses in managerial economics and public finance, but his favorite courses to conduct introduce undergraduate students to the principals of economics.
